

MARY NOONE

The Roaring Fork Valley and the West have been colorist Mary Noone's inspiration for over 26 years. Painting plein air, her work is all about color and experiencing the incredible yet disappearing beauty of the Western landscape.

"Colorado is powerful and alive . . . so should be the colors. For me painting is joyous. . . a vital and fulfilling passion." Through her expressive work, Noone seeks to preserve for future generations the vast open spaces and beauty of the West in a vibrant juxtaposition of colors.

Born in St. Louis, Noone now lives in Glenwood Springs with her husband and three children. A graduate of Georgetown University, she is basically a self-taught artist. Her work can be seen in private collections around the world and in numerous public art projects.

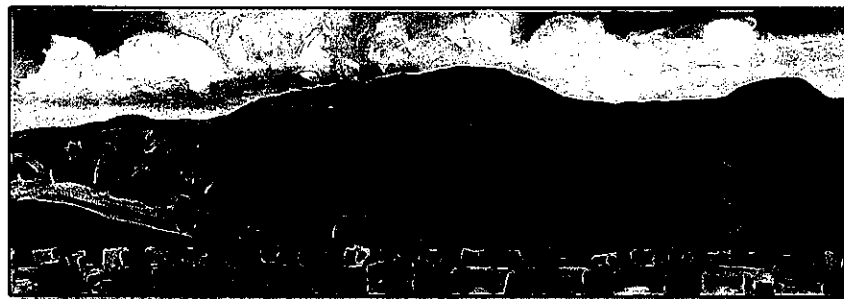

At Main Street Gallery we delight in Mary's spirit and joy of painting. We invite you to come to our Carbondale gallery at 399 Main Street September 5th to meet the artist and share in some of her exuberance and vision. This is an excellent opportunity to experience a wonderful collection of new works depicting Mary's interpretations of life around us.
